ABSTRACT

Teacher training is an ongoing process that develops and maintains the university professor in the field of content associated with teaching practice, for the sake of their career development and staff to pay tribute to the quality of the learning process of students. It contains the fields of didactic training and educational research. The self-preparation, as an individual methodological work is necessary condition in the pedagogical training of university professor and holds the components of the field of teaching training, its interface with the reflection of teaching practice and collective methodological work, which fosters acquisition of knowledge, methods, forms, and promotes changes in the mode of performance. It is important to mean that, when considering the relationship between the self-preparation and reflection of their own teaching practice, the teacher should use the knowledge and ideas in confrontation with the regulatory aspects and the results of their professional performance. This paper presents one of the results of the research conducted at the University of Cienfuegos on the self-preparation of university professors and their contribution to teacher training and aims to encourage teachers and administrators in higher education to analyze the interrelationship of self-preparation and reflection of teaching practice as a way that promotes inclusion, from an individual and collaborative perspective tasks that involve a challenge for teacher training.
